The New Look of Southlake Medical Care

Maybe it's the rows of vinyl chairs, the fluorescent lighting or the stark white walls. It's strange how patients sometimes feel worse inside a typical doctor's office than before they arrived. How is it that a place of healing can abnormally elevate blood pressure, but not other settings? (White Coat Syndrome, they call it.) And, this is all before the doctor even says hello.

THE GOOD DOCTORS AT MIHILLS-WEBB PRIMARY CARE HEALTH PARTNERS are out to change that perception. They've seen to it that your next doctor visit is as calming as possible and as comfortable as you deserve. From the moment you enter the lobby at Mihills-Webb, it becomes abundantly clear that this is no ordinary doctor's office—and this will not be just any ordinary doctor's visit.

Awash in natural light and elegantly appointed with luxurious furnishings (with nary a vinyl chair in sight), this 12,000 square foot facility is designed to put patients at ease. Completely redesigned by Elaine Williamson of Architectures Interior Design, an award-winning Dallas-based design firm. The combination of colors and textures is more reminiscent of a chic, inviting home rather than the traditional healthcare facility.

Children are also made to feel right at home. Instead of waiting restlessly in a reception chair, they can enjoy a custom tic-tac-toe table and an interactive magnetic "dress-up" wall throughout their wait. All play surfaces are easily, and regularly, sterilized to prevent the spread of germs. Well-patient waiting areas are also available.

Nothing puts a patient more at ease than high quality care and personal attention, and here is where partners and physicians, Cody L. Mihills and G. Wyatt Webb, truly excel. Since opening their state-of-the-art primary health-care and medical aesthetics facility on May 1, 2009, the doctors have provided complete, rounded family care with an emphasis on prevention. With over 30 years experience between them, Mihills—a graduate of Baylor University and Webb—a graduate of Louisiana State University—have brought their vision of cutting-edge care with a human touch to their Southlake practice.

Both doctors share a passion for medical research and science. To that end, they have dedicated an entire wing of their facility to their venture, Southlake Clinical Trials, LP.

They participate in clinical trials which allow them to offer advanced treatments and medicines to their patients, while keeping themselves ahead of the curve on the latest medical breakthroughs.

Keeping their patients' lifestyles and schedules in mind, Mills-Webb offers several new conveniences. Patients can now log on to www.millswebbmedical.com to request an appointment and download all new patient forms, which can be filled out in the comfort of their home and then returned on the day of creativity, youthful image. They are proud to offer Botox, Fraxel laser resurfacing, Juvederm, Prevelle Silk, as well as facial and acne peels. All treatments and procedures are performed by the doctors. They also offer private evening seminars and appointments for small groups designing aesthetic treatment and consultation. Imagine the medical office as a fabulous gathering place (they can even arrange the hors d'oeuvres Patient convenience is apparent in the high staff-to-patient ratio, the limited patient wait times and comprehensive health, testing and aesthetic services offered under one roof.
