

7 personal mistakes that can crush your career advancement

Everyone in the workforce, irrespective of stature or level therein, must be mindful of one critical truth: Your brand goes wherever you go because your "brand" is you!

Those seeking to move forward in their career would do well to embrace the 'You, Inc.' concept – the philosophy that you are the CEO, the administrative and financial manager, the research and development manager, the marketing manager, and the sales manager of your own career – whether you are entry-level or a seasoned executive.

Like any important, high-level managerial position, it's imperative to conduct yourself accordingly to successfully navigate today's cut throat competitive, ever-evolving job market.

Long gone are the days when simply showing up and working hard would ensure you had a job for life. Now, staffers at every level must continually assess, maintain and proactively demonstrate their employability to prove, without any doubt, the value they bring to the position, department and
