

And while staying in her safe place where she has the ocean nearby, Frankel is still hard at work with B Strong.

"The B Strong is an organization that specializes in disaster relief where there's actually been a crisis, where people have been devastated, where people have nothing and people are panicking," the reality star explained. "When people just want to connect with each other and they want to help, and that's where we come in and stay long after the headlines fade."

Due to the lack of sanitation products in US market places today, B Strong is working with the Global Empowerment Mission to create and disperse corona kits. These kits will consist of a tote bag with sanitation wipes, gloves, SOS Hydration and the medical community's recommendations.

"I'm putting my money where my mouth is because my money's already going to the masks and the hand sanitizer right now," she noted. "That's where [I'm at], I've got to write these checks because, as the former director of FEMA said, we can't wait to get the money. We have to pay for these things and figure it out later, so I'm paying for these things and figuring it out later."
